

We have found this; look and see whether or not it is your son's coat."

"It is the bloody coat of my Son!"

Gen. 37:32, 33

COVER: Geoffroy de Charny, dressed in leisure robes and unattended, stands at the gate of Saint-Omer, where he is stationed as the king's lieutenant, to receive the feigned surrender of Calais from Aimery de Pavie who arrives accompanied by a troop of knights, all in full armor and visors closed. It is not to be supposed that this is a portrait of Geoffroy de Charny, since the miniature dates from the XVth century.

Miniature in the Fragments des Chroniques de Froissart: ms. 6941, fol. 13 verso.
